WHO MAKES YOUR FOOD?

Buy local: It's a mantra repeated with such frequency in the bountiful Willamette Valley that it's almost lost all meaning. Let's take a step back and look at some numbers. According to the Willamette Farm and Food Coalition, a 2010 analysis estimated that Lane County consumers are spending less than 5 percent of their food money on locally produced food.

"OK, but locally produced food is hard to find," you scoff.

Actually, that's wrong! Lane County has an astonishing variety of locally grown foods — milk, veggies, fruit, herbs — and now that the Lane County Farmers Market is open on Thursdays as well as Tuesdays and Saturdays, locavores have even more opportunities to buy fresh produce.

The Willamette Valley is also home to numerous food makers that distribute their products locally as well as nationwide. We have granola makers, salsa crafters, chocolatiers, juicers, yogurt producers — you name it.

That's why EW decided to do this issue of Chow a little differently. Instead of highlighting new restaurants, we're taking a look at local businesses, people and companies that make food. There are so many that we couldn't possibly list them all in one issue, but we've tried to at least provide a snapshot of what local food production can offer. You can find many of these products in local grocery stores, farmers markets and even online.

So dig in and find out what delicious things your neighbors are making.

DRINKS

Blue Lotus Chai, founded in Eugene by Barbara and Stephan Cameron in 2010, makes it easy to brew a cup of milky, rich chai with its packets of powdered mix. It only takes one-fourth teaspoon of the mix added to water, milk and sugar to brew spicy, sweet goodness. The powder dissolves in hot water, making the entire cup of tea smooth and uniform in flavor. Find Blue Lotus Chai at a vast number of local establishments, including Red Barn Natural Grocery, Sweet Life Patisserie, Noisette, The Kiva and more, or check out bluelotuschai.com.

Eugene hosts a number of tea purveyors, including Yogi Tea in Springfield (yogiproducts.com), with its iconic herbal blends — seriously, its "Throat Comfort" tea is a godsend — and Labrang Tea Traders, which offers a tantalizing black tea blend called "Daydreamer's." It is sweet, mellow and comforting, with vanilla beans, red-rose pedals and cardamom pods. Head over to labrangtraders.com for more blends. Meanwhile, J-Tea International, which opened its second teahouse last month on 19th Avenue, sells tea from Taiwan and China, giving Eugene a glimpse into Eastern tea culture. Founded in 2004 by Josh Chamberlain, J-Tea has an enormous selection of tea blends, including "Eugene Breakfast," an orange pekoe black tea with smooth texture and tangy taste. ORGANIC LEMONS ROLL UP THE PRODUCTION LINE AT GENESIS JUICE

CREATIVE JUICES

GENESIS JUICE SQUEEZES HIGH-QUALITY FRUIT

BY RACHAEL CARNES

Since the 1970s, Genesis Organic Juice has prided itself on providing a product that's local, sustainable and 100-percent organic. And in that mission, it's taking on Big Soda.

"Odwalla is a Coke product. Naked is a Pepsi product," says Jonah Alves, president of Genesis Juice. "This new one, Suja, is a Coke product, and Evolution is a Starbucks product."

These ubiquitous juices compete for space on store shelves, but do average thirsty consumers comprehend that they're buying from a large corporate manufacturer? And should they care?

"We don't use juice-grade fruit," Alves says. "We use fruit-salad grade fruit. Every piece of fruit is handpicked and hand-culled. Nobody does that. All the rot, the bad spots, get dumped in and boiled away."

Boiling juice?

"With anything, heat degrades flavor and nutrition," Alves says.

Many juice manufacturers, Alves explains, boil away potential pathogens using high heat and leave the juices in enormous sealed vats, sometimes for up to a year. Later,

"flavor packs" are added back to the juice before packaging, to make it more palatable.

Not so Genesis Juice, which uses a method called high pressure processing (HPP) to make its juices safe to sell and consume without adding heat.

"Our technique uses pressure," Alves says. "No heat is used at all. So when it comes to taste, flavor and color, we think this is second-best to fresh squeezed."

HPP is a technology that Toby's Family Foods, which acquired Genesis Juice in 2007, has been using for years to preserve its spreads and dressings without cooking the tofu.

"When Genesis approached us, they were floundering, close to bankruptcy," Alves says. "We had similar company philosophies of using local products and 100-percent organic stuff."

He adds, "The cool thing is, we were able to save a long-time Eugene business."

Following the acquisition, Toby's hired back many Genesis employees and set to work on a package redesign.

Some may remember those stout little glass bottles with the fruity label.

"But there's nothing particularly sustainable about glass," Alves says.

The company opted for PETE plastic, the most recyclable.

Genesis juices are poured into bottles, and the whole container is put through the HPP process that uses hydrostatic pressure to kill any potential pathogens, while ensuring vitamins, minerals and antioxidants aren't damaged or degraded.

Because the plastic container is never heated, consumers don't need to fear that chemicals from the plastic container are potentially leaching into their food.

"Our juice retains 84 percent of its vitamins using this process," Alves says.

On the day EW visited Genesis Juice's production facility, the air was alive with the scent of fresh lemons for cranberry lemonade, ginger lemonade and strawberry lemonade. The company also makes a "Superfood Smoothie," a hibiscus cooler, several varieties of apple juice blends and an herbal tonic that's a perfect pick-me-up. They also press orange juice, though just for a few months of the year.

"Orange juice, when it's in season, is the best," Alves says. ■

BLISSING OUT

COCONUT BLISS BRINGS VEGAN GOODNESS TO THE ICE CREAM WORLD BY WILLIAM KENNEDY

'SUMMER BERRY SWIRL' IS MADE WITH ORGANIC STRAWBERRIES, BLUEBERRIES AND BLACKBERRIES

Local ice cream maker Coconut Bliss has built a nationally recognized brand name without sacrificing its core values of independence and integrity. Coconut Bliss marketing communications manager Elizabeth Reilly says these Eugene-style priorities are partially what make her company so unique. “We are one of the best examples of a family-run company in the region,” Reilly tells EW.

Coconut Bliss founders Luna Marcus and Larry Kaplowitz are themselves sensitive to dairy and soy. Prior to launching Coconut Bliss, the pair was disappointed with the ice cream alternatives on the market. “At the time, the alternatives were made out of either rice or soy,” Reilly says. “They didn’t have great flavor,” she explains, adding that instead the products were of “poor texture, they weren’t creamy. They weren’t satisfying.”

After taking some cooking classes, Marcus bought a hand-crank ice cream maker. “One day she was inspired to try coconut milk” as a base for her ice cream, Reilly recalls, “and the rest is history. We were the first product on the market to use coconut milk as a base for ice cream.”

Coconut Bliss sweetens its coconut milk with agave.

“It took off like wildfire,” Reilly adds, explaining Coconut Bliss is distributed nationwide as well as in Canada, Australia and Germany. Coconut Bliss recently launched two new flavors: “Chocolate Chip Cookie” and “Cinnamon Chocolate Fusion.”

Other flavors include “Naked Coconut,” “Salted Caramel and Chocolate” and “Vanilla Island.”

Reilly continues: “Our first customers were Red Barn and Sweet Life Patisserie. When it really started to snowball, Luna and Larry were still making it themselves. It was like, ‘OK, now we’ve got to figure out how to scale this model.’”

To deal with the added business, Junction City’s Lochmead Dairy stepped in to help with production. “Now they have a percentage ownership,” Reilly says. Nevertheless, Coconut Bliss has remained privately owned.

“We’ve never had to go through the acquisition process,” Reilly explains. “We’ve had the opportunity to maintain our philosophy and our product values.”

“Our entire product line is certified organic,” she continues. “We recently became members of the Organic Trade Association. We also support the non-GMO movement.” Reilly explains all Coconut Bliss products are vegan, gluten-, soy- and dairy-free.

“It doesn’t matter which flavor you pick up,” Reilly says. “If you have these specific dietary or lifestyle requirements — anything the customer buys is going to be OK for that.”

In addition, Coconut Bliss prioritizes sustainable business practices — the production facility is solar-powered.

The startup success story of Coconut Bliss is not uncommon in the Eugene area, particularly in the food production industry. Reilly says there’s something about Eugene that attracts and supports the entrepreneurial spirit.

“We are fortunate to live in this lush environment where food is not separate from us,” Reilly says. “This is close to us. This is personal.” ■

CRAFT CHOCOLATE

EUPHORIA IS CHOCOLATE WITHOUT THE OOMPA LOOMPAS BY RICK LEVIN

RAW COCOA BEANS
SERVE AS FODDER FOR EUPHORIA'S CHOCOLATE
TRUFFLES

I'm here to report that the Euphoria Chocolate Company in west Eugene bears little resemblance to the delicious Byzantine splendor of Willy Wonka's Chocolate Factory. Sadly, no orangey Oompa Loompas mobbed me at the entrance when I visited, and Euphoria proprietor Van Glass is practically the antithesis of that passive-aggressive tyrant Willy Wonka, whose benevolent disregard sent poor Augustus Gloop up the tube.

The insides of Euphoria, instead, are clean and elegant, almost Kubrickian in their steely geometry, and Van Glass — who co-owns the operation with his wife Bonnie Glass — is a kind, mild-mannered man whose professional approach to high-quality artisanal chocolate is less Gene Wilder than Henry Ford.

"Craft chocolate is just starting to gain serious momentum and is still in the early phases of growth," he tells me. "I would liken it to where the craft beer industry was about 20 years ago."

Bonnie Glass also emphasizes the unique characteristics of the sort of "small batch" craft chocolate in which Euphoria specializes. "A good-quality, consistent chocolate is satisfying," she explains. "Like wine, it has differences tied to region, production and a lot of other factors."

Together, the Glasses are the last people you might expect to be making and selling such addictive devilry as those chocolate-coated graham crackers I can't for the life of me stop wolfing down.

Nonetheless, Van and Bonnie Glass did exhibit a devious and somewhat Wonka-like delight as they watched me sample a generous offering of their latest innovations: soda truffles (grape, root beer, 7-Up, cola) and chocolate-coated cereal, which includes such classics consumer staples as Cap'n Crunch and the surprisingly delicious Golden Grahams.

Talk about knowing your audience. As I popped one delicacy after the other into my mouth ("don't mind if I do..."), a kind of Gloopian greed overtook me; I wasn't sure if I'd finish the chocolate or the chocolate would finish me.

It's hard to believe that, less than three years back, the Glasses were living in Costa Rica with no thought of making chocolate. Van, a Eugene native, has a background in software engineering, and Texas-born Bonnie's only experience with food production was working in a tortilla factory. When they moved to Eugene in December 2013, all they knew was they wanted a new venture.

"I soon learned that the owners of Euphoria Chocolate Co. were retiring and thought this would be a perfect opportunity for us both," Van says, noting that Euphoria "has been part of the community for the past 35 years, so it is important to us that we be good stewards continuing to offer customer favorites while also introducing new product lines that allow us to put our own stamp on the company."

"I think people like buying something new to try," Bonnie adds. "It gives them a reason to keep coming in."

Perhaps the biggest flag the Glasses have planted in the established company comes on the production side of things. Among all the munchies I sampled was evidence of the Glasses' most daring venture — a truffle that the company has created from beginning to end, unlike most manufacturers who buy their chocolate base in bulk.

What this means is that Euphoria is now in the business of buying raw cocoa beans from places like Ghana, Guatemala and Papua New Guinea; they roast the beans themselves (similar to the way coffee is roasted, but at a lower temp), separate the meaty nib from the husk ("winnowing"), grind the nibs into a chocolate "liqueur" (the "mélange" process) and, from there, turn them into truffles.

Euphoria's bean-to-bar truffles are disarmingly complex. Unlike most mass-produced chocolate, which strikes a single sweet note, the truffles reveal themselves slowly, with a flavor profile that unfolds hints of coffee, fruit and a becoming bitter-sweetness that is satisfying in a uniquely adult way. Euphoria's truffles are to the waxy monotone of Hershey's chocolate what Budweiser is to, say, Ninkasi or Hop Valley. It's like the world goes from flat to round.

The Glasses seem pleased at my response, and both say they are excited for local customers to try their new wares. "One of my favorite parts of my job is doing chocolate tastings," Van Glass later tells me. "I enjoy nothing more than to get together with a group of people who have never tasted craft chocolate before, walk them through a series of different single-origin chocolates and discuss impressions."

The least I could do was oblige. ■

Euphoria Chocolate Company's main plant is at 4090 Stewart Road, with products sold at several outlets and stores around town, including the new downtown Euphoria at 946 Willamette Street; for further information, visit euphoriachocolate.com.

SALSA & SPICE

PATRICIA GARCIA MAKES FLAVORFUL SALSAS AND SAUCES

BY AMY SCHNEIDER

Stroll through the Lane County Farmers Market on a Saturday morning and you're bound to see Patricia Garcia's cheerful face at her colorful salsa stand. That same cheerful face is on all of her products, inviting salsa lovers to give Salsa Garcia a try.

"I believe that sauce really makes the meal, no matter what kind of food you're having," Garcia says. "If you have a good sauce, then your meal is right-on most of the time."

An accomplished chef, Garcia is most well known for her salsas, but she also makes tamales and enchilada sauce. She started out working at television and radio stations in California, Nevada and Colorado, cooking for friends and bringing her salsas to parties, but she didn't start selling her sauces at Saturday Market until 2013. After that, she switched to the Lane County Farmers Market, where she now sells her tamales and salsas every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday.

Garcia's salsas pop in bright colors of red and green, zingy and flavorful. Her signature "original salsa" is velvety smooth and has a spicy kick that doesn't overpower the other flavors. Garcia's "salsa verde" is thicker in texture, more mild in taste with an appealing lime-green color.

*'MY PRODUCTS
ARE ALL ABOUT THE FLAVOR.'*

— PATRICIA GARCIA, SALSA GARCIA

Her third offering, "Chicano chile sauce," dances on the tongue with a bright dazzle of flavor, and the orangey red color looks beautiful on display.

The key to Garcia's salsas, she says, is the balance of spiciness against the flavors in the mix. "My products are all about the flavor," she says. "You can taste garlic, the jalapeños, the scallions — and I don't use onions, because onions tend to overpower everything."

Garcia grew up in Calexico, California, immediately across the border from Mexicali in Mexico. She says her family has long served as inspiration for her products — some of Garcia's recipes come from her mother, and her sister has helped Garcia develop the flavor profile she sought in her salsas.

During a typical week, Garcia makes 5 gallons of salsa at a time, a process that takes around two hours. She rents a kitchen from FOOD for Lane County — "they've been a godsend," she says — and uses in-season ingredients from local Crossroads Farm. She roasts the jalapeños, then blends all the ingredients together to make about 42 16-ounce containers in one batch.

The enchilada sauce, Garcia says, is a lengthier endeavor, happening over the course of three days and producing about 12 gallons of sauce. She also puts in 13-hour days on Sundays to make tamales — she sells 20 to 30 dozen a week, along with 40 gallons of salsa and 15 gallons of enchilada sauce.

This is in addition to the hours of work she puts in at the Lane County Farmers Market throughout the week.

What makes all the hours worth it, Garcia says, is spending time at the market and watching her customers light up as they get a mouthful of one of her sauces. "It makes me feel good that people get such a joy from my salsa and my tamales," she says.

Garcia adds that she also enjoys the atmosphere of the market and trading her salsas with farmers for local produce like goat cheese and lettuce. "Everybody there works so hard," she says. "It's amazing."

In the future, Garcia says she hopes to see her salsas in local restaurants. Her products are already available at Market of Choice, Capella Market, Haggen (soon to revert to Albertsons) and, when it opens in the fall, Whole Foods.

She credits her son and husband for their support — a marketing and business major, Garcia's son helped her develop the brightly colored packaging that makes her salsas instantly recognizable.

"We like a lot of color," she laughs. "We're very flashy." ■

WILDTIME FOODS MAKES TASTY LOCAL GRANOLA BY DAEMON LEE

WHIT HEMPHILL, LEFT, AND BRAD AVERILL IN WILDTIME FOODS' PRODUCTION FACILITY

Its “Salted Caramel” snack is sweet, crunchy and melts in your mouth, while “Spicy Sriracha” tingles on the tongue. Cosmos started in 2004 but expanded in 2012 to its production facility in Junction City, and has been cranking out addictively delicious oven-baked corn ever since. Look up cosmoscreations.com to get your snack on.

You can trust De Casa Fine Foods to supply all the salsa, hummus, bean dip and tortillas needed for dinner or a football party. Manufactured in Eugene, De Casa's tortillas come in a variety of sizes, from adorably miniature “snack” size to hefty “burrito” size. All tortillas are vegan and pair well with De Casa's salsas, which come in mild, medium and hot. See the full line of products at decasafinefoods.com.

Granola is a health food and a symbol of the natural foods movement, and the word itself is sometimes used as a mildly derogatory epithet to describe a health-obsessed hippie.

Whit Hemphill and Brad Averill, co-owners of Wildtime Foods, which produces Grizzlies Brand granola, say they embrace granola and all it stands for.

“There's something real tangible to it and direct about it,” Hemphill says about granola. “It's not some mushed-up thing in a bar or in a powdered shake or something like that.”

“You just look at it,” he says of granola, and see that you “could have made it.”

Wildtime has been in business for 35 years, and in 2014, it relocated to a larger building in the Whiteaker, where Wildtime makes granola as well as trail mix, muesli and salted nuts.

From the outside, the Wildtime Foods building looks like any other office. It's the smell that gives it away, a mixture of cinnamon, oats or nuts, depending on which recipe is being prepared that day. Inside, the ovens are giving off heat and people with aprons work steadily on the next batch of granola.

From this building, tucked away on 2nd and Van Buren next to the railroad tracks, Wildtime sends its Grizzlies granola to health food stores and co-ops across the West.

As perhaps is fitting, one of the original founders of the company was a musician, Doug Clark, who was trying to earn a bit of supplementary income. Clark, who was also involved with The Eugene Comic News, started making granola bars in 1981.

The company has since changed owners, but it has continued more or less doing the same thing. Each batch is relatively small, between 25 to 35 pounds, depending on the recipe. Many of these recipes have been around for years, like the organic

Swiss muesli, its best seller.

“I definitely think that what makes us unique is the small-batch, handmade process,” Hemphill says. “Most others in the industry don't do it that way. It's much more mechanized.”

Averill adds, “A lot of the places use a belt oven and they have a huge hopper where the stuff is mixed in. You're literally dumping in 100 pounds of oats at the same time.”

They occasionally try new things as well, like the American Beauty granola, a tribute to the Grateful Dead. This granola has a salted maple flavor, a decision they made after sending samples to two former members of the Grateful Dead for feedback.

The move to the Whiteaker was a big transition. Previously the company was based in Glenwood, and the building there served its purpose for a long time, but the space was just too small, limiting storage and requiring workers to constantly slip by each other. Their excitement about the new building is evident as Averill and Hemphill point out the boxes and bags and bins stacked floor to ceiling in the two-story storage room.

“When we knew we were going to move, we really analyzed the workflow at each workstation and each process,” Averill says. “So when we came over here we could design those to be much more efficient.”

Business is going well for now, and the company is seeing new demand from places like Fred Meyer. And every day, the UPS truck comes and picks up the 25- to 35-pound boxes of granola to be shipped to stores from Oregon to Montana and northern California.

“Our idea is to continue to make craft, hand-made stuff,” Hemphill says, “and have it be something that is identifiable as a quality Oregon-made product.” ■

SAUCES & SPICES

Yep, there's a vanilla producer in Eugene, and it has the cutest name ever: Singing Dog Vanilla. The company says it works with farming families in Papua New Guinea and Indonesia, giving them a share of profits in exchange for sustainable growing practices. Singing Dog Vanilla sells its vanilla in traditional extract form, as well as vanilla beans, vanilla salt, vanilla coffee and lip-quenching vanilla lip balm. Get your vanilla fix at singingdogvanilla.com.

Marty Parisien and Bill Wiedmann founded Red Ape Cinnamon in 2013 with the goal of distributing everyone's favorite holiday-reminiscent spice. Red Ape's cinnamon is organic and grown in Sumatra. As you might have guessed, "Red Ape" is a reference to orangutans, natives of Indonesia. Red Ape says it donates 5 percent of its profits to "organizations that protect orangutans and their habitat." The company has also "adopted" a handful of great apes through Orangutan Outreach, a nonprofit dedicated to saving the primates. Head over to redapecinnamon.com to learn more.

MILK & HONEY

A fixture in Eugene since the 1970s, GloryBee overflows with honey and a love for bees. From its factory store on the outskirts of Eugene, GloryBee makes all of its products, including wax candles, cooking and baking supplies, a vast assortment of honeys and other sweeteners, and a comprehensive collection of beekeeping gear, helping out people interested in starting their own hive. GloryBee also gives back to the buzzy pollinators it depends on — through its "Save the Bee" initiative, GloryBee says it has raised $65,658 for the Oregon State Honey Bee Lab to help fund bee research. For more, visit glorybee.com.

Nancy's Springfield Creamery, owned and operated by the Kesey family, got its start in 1970, and the company is still going strong. Nancy's yogurts, cottage cheese and sour creams are ubiquitous in Lane County, as is their cute, colorful packaging. Nancy's says most of its milk comes from farms within a 50-mile radius of Eugene — so you can thank local cows for all that creamy goodness. Head over to nancysyogurt.com for more.

Aptly named, So Delicious has spent the past 25 years making dairy-free delights in Springfield. Its ingredients include dairy alternatives like coconut milk, almond milk and cashew milk, and So Delicious doesn't stop at beverages. It also makes frozen desserts — check out "Dark Chocolate Truffle" ice cream made with cashew milk — yogurt alternatives and coffee creamers. The Eugene-based company was purchased by WhiteWave in 2014. Find more at sodeliciousdairyfree.com.

PACKING FOR THE FUTURE

SWEET CREEK FOODS OPERATES IN ELMIRA, OREGON

SWEET CREEK FOODS FILLS A NICHE IN LANE COUNTY'S LOCAL FOOD SYSTEM

BY WILLIAM KENNEDY

Traditional capitalism teaches bigger is always better. Not so with Lane County-based Sweet Creek Foods.

"It isn't sustainable to grow too large," Sweet Creek owner and founder Paul Fuller tells EW. "You lose the flavor if you're trucking everywhere."

Located near Elmira, family-owned Sweet Creek Foods works with Eugene-area farms and food producers, co-packing and preserving food for consumers from Bellingham to San Francisco. "We believe in a static growth," Fuller says. "To go national takes fighting the big boys. We like the idea of being a regional player."

Fuller got his start in the refrigeration business, helping launch many well-known local food establishments. Fuller's wife Judy designs Sweet Creek labels and helps with the bookkeeping. The couple's sons have become involved in the family business as well. "We wanted to create a business to retire on," Fuller recalls, "and then we hoped to be able to maintain that size."

He explains, "We have about 30 different products," including tuna, pickles, marinara sauce, enchilada sauce and jam, all sold in glass jars. The enchilada sauce is loaded with flavor, tastefully spicy and complementary to other enchilada ingredients.

"Sweet Creek packs product for small companies and farms for farm stands and farmers markets," Fuller says, but also for local grocers like The Kiva, Sundance, Red Barn and many more.

"We've worked with a lot of the food businesses in town," Fuller says. "We've worked with Gathering Together Farms up in Philomath," he adds, as well as Junction City's Groundwork Organics. "We work with the fisherman out in Newport to get our tuna."

"We're trying to be the third leg in a local food system," Fuller says, explaining that some produce isn't available year-round in Oregon, and by preserving foods, Sweet Creek is "trying to work with the bounty here and get it to the people in a different way."

Sweet Creek prioritizes living-wage jobs for its employees. "Our goal is to keep the people that we have employed here," he says.

Fuller says this all makes Sweet Creek unique in Lane County's already thriving food industry — an industry he says is vibrant enough to make Eugene a "food hub."

"There's a lot of natural food stores," Fuller continues. "There's a lot of good organic produce available. People are very inclined to support local products and local production." Nevertheless, he says the economic potential of Eugene's food scene remains unrealized.

"We have the beer, we have the wine," Fuller says, noting Lane County also has several food processing businesses with small to relatively large-scale operations.

"We're a hub of food, [with] a lot of ideas about how to get local and regional food hubs going." ■

HERBAL BLEND

SPICES, HERBS AND TEAS
FROM MOUNTAIN ROSE HERBS

BY CLAIRE RISCHIOTTO

MOUNTAIN ROSE HERBS IS THE FIRST EUGENE BUSINESS TO RECEIVE SALMON-SAFE CERTIFICATION

In Eugene, we take comfort in having local stores and markets dedicated to wholesome organic food, from The Kiva and Sundance Natural Foods to Market of Choice. But where do they get their ingredients? For herbs, teas and spices, one top supplier is Mountain Rose Herbs.

Mountain Rose Herbs has operated in Eugene since 2010. Along with boasting a total of 3,000 different products, it is rooted in the values of sustainability.

“Sustainability and sustainability initiatives are built into every facet of our organization, from the materials that we use to how we ship products, to even what we decide to offer,” says Shawn Donnille, vice president of Mountain Rose Herbs. “We will not offer any product that comes from conventional sources. It all has to be organic or cultivated without chemicals.”

To purchase Mountain Rose Herbs products, customers can make a phone call, place an order online or go to the company’s headquarters to pick up the purchase. Another option is to purchase Mountain Rose’s herbs, teas and spices at local stores and markets, such as Friendly Street Market, Sundance and Capella.

Among the thousands of ingredients sold by Mountain Rose Herbs are products ranging from Earl Grey tea to nettle leaf and matcha tea. The company’s content strategist, Erin McIntosh, has the unique job of experimenting with Mountain Rose Herbs’ ingredients and creating recipes, which then are posted on the company’s blog and published in Mountain Rose Herbs’ e-book.

A sampling of the recipes evoke summer, including a tea cocktail, a hibiscus highball, flower-infused ice cream, lavender brownies and gluten-free, vegan seed crackers.

Soon, Mountain Rose Herbs will open an apothecary called Mountain Rose Herbs Mercantile, located within the Farmers’ Union Marketplace at Fifth Avenue and Olive Street in downtown Eugene.

The company has yet to set a specific date for the opening, but Donnille shares that the apothecary will open this year between September and October.

Adorning the inside of the store, Donnille explains, will be “steampunk Victorian apothecary post-industrial” décor purchased from antique stores, including a long row of glass candy dispensaries filled with herbs. Donnille adds that while not all of the Mountain Rose Herbs ingredients will be sold at the apothecary, customers can place orders via kiosks at the store and pick up the order the following day. ■

To learn more about Mountain Rose Herbs, visit mountainroseherbs.com; its headquarters are at 4060 Stewart Road in Eugene.

Word is

There's a new Japanese-style pub in town called Izakaya Oyazi (no relation to Izakaya Meiji) in the building formerly occupied by Granary Pizza Co. at 259 E. 5th Avenue in downtown Eugene. The menu presents a variety of tapas-style choices, from calamari to beef short ribs, accompanied by a full drink menu. The restaurant doesn't appear to have a website yet, but we hope it hooks into the social media scene soon.
